308th Field Signal Battalion	1917-1919	AV 252	1 cubic foot
Description	Topics		Formats
Approximately 100 U.S. Field Signal Corps photos documenting U.S. participation in World War I, most with typed captions. Also includes one 50+ page scrapbook, disassembled, and one ~100 page scrapbook, bound. Items were collected by Gladden and other members of the 308th. Photographs were taken by members of the 308th and include members of the unit while in training at Camp Sherman, traveling by ship to and from Europe, and on active duty in Europe, primarily in France. The 308th Field Signal Battalion was formed at Camp Sherman between March and October 1917. It was ordered into active service on October 5, as part of the 83rd Infantry Division, known during World War I as the "OHIO Division" because of a distinctive O-H-I-O insignia on their flag. The 308th remained in the United States in training exercises until June 1918, when they left for Europe. They participated in the battles of Aisne-Marne, Oise-Aisne, Meuse-Argonne, and Champagne before demobilizing in August 1919. Lawrence Sutton	1917-1919	LH-MISC. MSS	100+ letters
Description		Topics	Formats
Transcriptions of more than 100 letters written by Corporal Lawrence Sutton to his parents in Grover Hill, Ohio, between October 1917 and February 1919. Several letters written to Sutton by his comrades after the war are also included in the transcriptions. Sutton provided details of military life at Camp Sherman, including military training, clothing, food, health concerns, facilities, weather, weaponry and camp life with his comrades. Raised in a religious home and isolated from urban influences, Sutton frequently expressed amazement at his comrades' activities such as card playing, gambling, drinking, and cursing. Sutton also commented on his comrades' racial and ethnic prejudices. In March 1918, Sutton noted that "all the foreigners" were selected from his company for overseas service. Sutton also suffered during outbreaks of communicable diseases including scarlet fever and mumps.
